ACCORDING to a foreign journal, Dr. Erich Zugmayer, a young naturalist who has already gained some experience as a traveler during a journey in Western Asia, described in his book, 'Eine Reise durch Vorderasien,' has lately undertaken an expedition to Tibet, which he hopes to cross from north to south, returning through India. He had reached Polu, on the southern border of Chinese Turkestan, in June, 1906, having traveled by the newly opened trans-Aral railway to Tashkend, and thence proceeded via Kashgar, Yarkand, and Khotan. From the last-named place he had executed a route survey, making also astronomical and meteorological observations in addition to those relating to his more special subject, natural history. He had already sent back from Polu three cases full of the collections made during the earlier part of the journey. From Polu he hoped to cross the Shu-bashi pass, and to examine an area hitherto blank on the map before striking the route of Dutreuil de Rhins.

NATURE says: "The report of the Board of Education for the year 1905-6 is of an encouraging nature. There is plenty of evidence provided that our national system of technical education continues steadily to improve. The report points out that much attention has been paid throughout the country to the extension and improvement of the facilities provided for continuative education. There has been marked activity in the establishment of courses of instruction affording special technical training, and the effective character of the many courses organized under varied conditions shows that local circumstances have received the consideration necessary for success in this kind of educational work. Technical institutions affording whole-time training for those who can give two or more years to study after completing a secondary school course have improved and multiplied their courses of technical instruction. The multiplication of courses, requiring the whole time of students is a gratifying indication of the growing appreciation of the value of the work of the technical school; but this appreciation is not confined to whole-time instruction. The improved organization of the varied institutions engaged in supplementing the training which a youth receives in the office or workshop has borne fruit in many practical developments, demonstrating the extent to which such further education may become a recognized element in the lives of our youths. The report, which runs to 106 pages, deals fully with every department of elementary, secondary and technical education, and shows conclusively that, notwithstanding, valuable work is being accomplished in the schools."
